Arthur Miller
1915-2005

- “Big Three” American playwright (along with Eugene O’Neill and Tennessee Williams)
- Enriched the Broadway stage for several decades
- Dramas take place in familial settings, but he has made a reputation for dealing with contemporary political and moral issues.
- In 1965 he was elected president of PEN (Poets, Playwrights, Editors, Essayists, and Novelists), an international literary organization that he guided toward a platform of world peace and understanding, providing artists and writers a forum for expressing their views and fighting governmental repression worldwide.
- Married to Marilyn Monroe 1956-1961
- Miller’s major plays have been produced internationally and adapted for radio, television, and motion pictures.
- 1993: received the National Medal of the Arts from President Clinton.

FAMOUS WORKS:
- All My Sons (1947), winner of the Drama Critics Circle Award
- Death of a Salesman (1949), winner of both the Drama Critics Circle Award and the Pulitzer Prize
- The Crucible (1953), Tony Award
